BREED THEATER.

The Great Train Hold-Up, Sensational Western Drama.

Another picture sensation is the feature at the Breed theater, and for the remainder of the week will thrill and interest the patrons of this theater. It is a sensational story of a band of robbers who surround and capture the station agent of a little western town, and, proceeding up the track in disguise of railroad men, they signal the limited to stop. This accomplished, they make short work of rifling the cars and obtaining all of value in them, and compel the engineer to take his train to the next station under cover of revolvers. The station agent's son, coming with his father's supper, discovers the condition of the station, and, following the tracks of the robbers, steals upon the mail bags that were hidden in the woods, and the little fellow crawls into an empty one were hidden in the woods, and the little fellow crawls into an empty one and is carried by them to their shack in the wilderness, and in the fierce fight that follows over the booty he cuts his way out of the bag and escape sto the sheriff's office and informs him in time to return to the spot and capture the whole gang, which is still engaged in a desperate fight.

Two splendid Biograph pictures are on the programme, and two fine dramatic subjects, Mr. Morrissey singing the season's craze. That Chinatown the season's craze. That Chinatown Rag, and You're Never Sure of the Girl.

POETRY.

WAIT PATIENTLY FOR HIM. ied doth not bld thee wait,

To disappoint at inst:
A golden promise fair and great.
In precept moid is cast,
Soon shall the morning gild
The dark horizon rim.
Thy heart's desire shall be fulfilled,
"Wait patiently for Him."

The weary waiting times
Are but the muffled fields
Low precluding celestial chimes
That hail His charlot wheels.
Trust Him to tune thy voice
To blend with scraphim;
His "Wait" shall issue in "Rejvice!"
"Wait patiently for Him."

He doth not bid thee wait,
Like driftwood on the wave,
For fickle chance or fixed fats
To ruin or to save.
Thine eyes shall surely see—
No distant hope or dim—
The Lord thy God arise for thus,
"Wait patiently for Him."
